I recently had the honor of performing Beethoven's 9th Symphony under the direction of Edward Benyas. It's rare to perform a piece of this scale (72 minutes long!), and even rarer to perform this piece with such a talented ensemble. As a double major in German education and music education, I like to find connections between music and German culture, so I am lucky that Germany has a rich musical culture dating back to the eighteenth century. Learning German has allowed me to gain a greater appreciation for the works of Bach, Mozart, Beethoven, Wagner, and the countless other legendary composers born in Germany; not only can I better understand their lyrics, I can also better understand the cultural context in which their pieces were written.

Let my experience be a reminder of the many practical applications of German, and always remember that when you learn German, you are learning so much more than a language. If you missed the concert but would like to see a recording, you can find one on the SIU School of Music YouTube channel.
