Germany is one of the United States' most important trading partners, which makes German useful for banking and commercial industries, such as athletic attire, automobiles, aviation, beer and wine, pharmaceuticals, and tourism. German is one of the most widely spoken language in the European Union and can be helpful for numerous fields, including chemistry, physics, engineering, environmental studies, history, literature, philosophy, political science, music, theater, and theology.

German 101a and German 101b will be offered online this summer. German 101a does not require a prerequisite. The courses may be taken separately — you may take just German 101a or German 101b depending on your placement level. You can also satisfy the one-year language requirement of the College of Liberal Arts in only 12 weeks this summer by taking both courses in sequence!
