C. Grants Applied for:

ACTIVE: Part of a large team that applied for a 1.7 million dollar grant on the Canadian Roots of Phenomenology from SHRCC; I am involved in the Josiah Royce part of the grant, with the Center for Dewey Studies and IUPUI Institute of American Thought; we are designated for 120K. Jason M. Bell is the principal author of the grant and received 18K to develop the grant proposal.

D. Grants Received:

(1) The Foundation for the Philosophy of Creativity $1K for the second Lewis Hahn Memorial Lecture, July 11, 2012, Albert Rothenberg (Harvard University), lecturer.

(2) with Leslie Brown and Rebecca L. Farinas, $12K from almost a dozen sources, mostly internal to SIUC, for an exhibit in the University Museum, Arthur C. Danto's Woodblock Prints: Capturing Art and Philosophy, August 27-October 1, 2010. This was a complex series of sponsored events, involving an opening, several public talks, and a visiting lecture by David Carrier of Case Western Reserve University. I was the nominal head of the whole effort, but the hardest work was done by Brown and Farinas.

(3) (with Douglas R. Anderson) Hocking-Cabot Fund for Systematic Philosophy. PI for the Hocking-Cabot Seminar, $21.5K grant for organizing a seminar of ten young Ph.D.'s to meet with Jaakko Hintikka and Robert C. Neville for one week, for the purpose of encouraging the development of original systematic philosophies in the tradition of William Ernest Hocking; held at SIU Carbondale, July 11-17, 2010.

(4) The Foundation for the Philosophy of Creativity $1K for the first Lewis Hahn Memorial Lecture, July 14, 2010, Robert C. Neville (Boston University), lecturer.

(5) The Foundation for the Philosophy of Creativity. Principal Organizer and grant administrator of "Frontiers of Creativity: A Conference." Funded by the Foundation for the Philosophy of Creativity; $60K, with significant in-kind contributions by the following SIU units: School of Law, College of Education and Human Services, the College of Liberal Arts, the Department of Philosophy, and the Department of Speech Communication. Total estimated cost of conference, $100K. Held at SIUC, September 26-28, 2002.

(6) LaGrange College. Development of a course outline, syllabus and teaching guide for "The Essentials of Leadership" a required course in the Organizational Leadership degree program of LaGrange College, Albany Extension (Georgia). Course combines contemporary leadership research (on the Servant/Leadership Model) with a Western Humanities survey (August-October, 1999). $3K.

(7) Oklahoma Criminal Justice Resource Center (a State Agency). Development of a Comprehensive Flow Chart of the Criminal Justice System in Oklahoma. This was a grant-sponsored research project for the Oklahoma Criminal Justice Resource Center and the Oklahoma Department of Corrections, and part of a comprehensive reform of the entire system. With my co-principal researcher, Prof. Howard Kurtz (Sociology Chair at OCU), we tracked and schematized the relations among the multiple agencies in the entire Oklahoma criminal justice system. Project deadline was February 28, 1995; project was completed on schedule. $12K

(8) N.E.H. Fellow for the Summer Institute "Giambattista Vico and Humanistic Knowledge," Emory University, 1993. $3.3K, plus expenses.

Numerous travel grants are not listed, mainly from various offices at SIUC, some as large as $1.5K.

E. Honors and Awards:

Visiting Scholar, The Center for Inquiry Transnational, Amherst, NY, February 2007

Jacobsen Prize in Process Metaphysics from the International Society for Universalism, 1991.

Douglas Greenlee Prize awarded by the Society for the Advancement of American Philosophy for "best paper presented at the annual conference by either a graduate student or Ph.D. of no more than five years," 1990.

BLOG

Empirical Magazine ran an invited blog for regular contributors to the magazine. The magazine was thus the publisher of the blog. Most of my contributions are under the heading “Picktures and Pieces” (P&P below) <http://empiricalmag.blogspot.com/>. The blog was active during the time the magazine was being published. After it closed, a group of its writers formed “Radically Empirical,” a collective blog on current events, literary and cultural essays, and hope for future community. <http://radicallyempirical.com/> I revised, reposted and continued my Picktures and Pieces series here, separating out and the posts related to Extreme Virtue, which are essays on radical leaders and their virtues. In January 2014 I began a series called “Troubadours,” essays of creativity and music.

SUMMARY OF ADMINISTRATIVE ACTIVITIES

As Chair of the OCU Philosophy Department (Five-year term, 1992-1997):

- set the department course offerings, staffing and schedules
- set, maintained and administered all department budgets
- wrote all departmental reports, including comprehensive five-year assessment in 1996
- hired two full-time and seven adjunct professors
- expanded the philosophy course offerings by more than 200%
- increased departmental credit hour production gradually from 91 to 633 per semester
- increased the total number of philosophy majors from two to an average of fourteen, minors from one to eight
- handled all academic and career advising for the philosophy majors
- interviewed and selected scholarship award winners from among high school applicants
- did recruiting presentations for OCU in high schools
- developed a three-semester logic sequence for the philosophy major
- developed with the Psychology Chair a four course sequence to train psychology majors in theory of knowledge & scientific reasoning (added to catalog in 1995)
- serviced the Education Division by taking responsibility for the graduate philosophy of education requirement
- completely restructured the Philosophy Major and created a regular rotation for all Philosophy courses (part of a total restructuring of the College of Arts and Sciences in 1993-94)
- serviced the School of Religion by covering all of the ethics courses, and some of the systematic theology courses needed by their majors and graduate students (2-3 sections per semester)
- serviced the Political Science Department by taking on the theory requirements in the Political Science major, including designing a new course in contemporary political theory, now taught on a regular rotation
- negotiated a regular graduate business ethics course for the Business School's Master of Science in Accounting
- initiated, proposed and administered a program in business ethics, resulting in the design of a required course in business ethics for all undergraduate management and business admin. majors (taught from the philosophy dept., two sections per semester since fall 1994)
- co-created a course in ethics for health care providers, designed to meet the needs of the OCU Pre-med program and School of Nursing
- initiated a new course of studies (along with an adjunct instructor) in Native American Philosophy and Ethics, resulting in OCU's current consideration of creating a minor in Native American Studies
- worked on a cross-disciplinary committee (English, History, Political Science, Philosophy) to create a B.A. major and minor in American Studies; this involved the development of a new course in American Philosophy
- initiated a program with the nearby Classen School of Advanced Study (a public secondary magnet school) to have philosophy courses taught there by the OCU Philosophy Dept. Program commenced fall 1996. Expanded to two year-long courses in 1997; this program continues to grow.
- The Philosophy department's five-year assessment is being used as the model for other departments in the College.

As Director of the OCU Masters of Liberal Arts Program (1994-1999):

- set course offerings, staffing and schedules for each semester (an average of 25 courses per semester, plus dozens more courses which are crosslisted with some 20 departments, schools and programs)
- designed and administered the program's budgeting
- advised and maintained records on all students in the program (now approx. 100 per semester)
- supervised and evaluated more than twenty faculty members who regularly teach in the program
- recruited numerous new faculty to teach in the program
- recruited new students for the program (which includes activities such as designing ads for newspapers, speaking in schools and churches, mass mailings, arranging contacts, holding Open Houses, following out inquiries, etc.)
- recruited former students to return to the program
- founded the OCU Institute of Liberal Arts, officially described as an interdisciplinary scholarly institute which (aside from housing the Masters of Liberal Arts degree program) promotes the liberal arts through the sponsorship of speakers, workshops and other cultural activities; the Institute began publishing The Personalist Forum in 1997.
- designed and implemented all policies and specifications by which a Master's thesis may be written as one option

- in the MLA Program (never available before; the first completed thesis was defended Nov. 16, 1995)
- with the Political Science Dept., created a three-course sequence in Public Administration to service the Public Administration track in the OCU MBA Program
- overseen all communications and co-ordination between the MLA Program and the recruiters of graduate student in OCU Graduate Admissions, and OCU International Student Office
- undertaken and completed a preliminary comprehensive assessment of the MLA Program through the OCU Academic Programs and Standards Committee of the OCU Faculty Senate
- in response to the preliminary assessment, reconstituted (fall 1996) the defunct MLA Council to govern the MLA Program, with a representative from each MLA track serving for their departments --a needed decentralization of a program too large and far-flung to be well-administered by a single office
- with MLA Council, implemented comprehensive exams for four tracks (Literature, Philosophy, International Studies and Leadership/Management); in lieu of a comprehensive exam in the Writing track, we implemented a plan for portfolio assessment of graduating students; a plan for a required graduate exhibit in the Art track has also been implemented
- with MLA Council, currently working to get all data-collecting and assessment functions in place so as to facilitate a major self-assessment in 1999-2000 academic year
- with MLA Council, reformulated mission statement, program goals and objectives
- started a new Philosophy track in the MLA degree program (1994), which has six students currently enrolled, and eleven graduated
- with the Asian Studies Program and MLA Council, started a new International Studies track, which commenced in the spring of 1997; the first four graduates will finish in the spring of '99
- with the several departments, revised six existing tracks (Art, Literature, Writing, Mass Communications, Banking and Leadership/Management in the MLA degree program so as to increase their academic standards (1996)
- with the History Dept. and MLA Council, abolished the MLA History track (fall 1997), due to lack of faculty enthusiasm for its graduate program, and unwillingness to implement comprehensive exams and upgrade standards
- with Mass Communications Dept. and MLA Council designed a plan for phasing out the Mass Communications track (which was the largest in the program) due to unsolvable problems with its academic integrity, traceable mostly to lack of faculty and library resources; three-year phase out plan approved March 1998; implemented beginning September 1998; now nearly complete
- with MLA Council, Admissions and Communications Offices, worked to develop a comprehensive marketing strategy; early phases and portions are complete (e.g., newspaper in the metro area and regional direct mail campaign for philosophy track, etc.)
- with MLA Council, wrote, revised and finalized the MLA Handbook, a comprehensive guide to all policies and procedures pertaining to the OCU MLA Program; first edition approved by MLA Council vote April 24, 1998.
- with MLA Council authorization, negotiated with OCU School of Law regarding the creation of a joint MLA/JD degree;
- with MLA Council authorization, searched for a sister institution in England with which to set up on-going exchange and study abroad programs.
